Consider the following argument.

"If prices are high, then wages are high. Prices are high or there are price controls. If there are price controls, then there is no inflation. There is inflation. Thus, wages are high."

If we assume that the first four statements are true, must we accept the conclusion?